The difficulty? Nothing more than a few drops of food coloring. The meat served was a bilious green, the milk a bright blue, and the butter a chocolate brown. Other equally weird color combinations greeted the table; nothing looked familiar. Past experience told the diners when meat is green it is best left strictly alone, and who can guess the horrors hidden in a serving of bright-red mashed potatoes. Although the participants knew the food was perfectly safe, no one was able to put mind over matter.

The important lesson to be learned from this experiment is that the mind and body are intimately related. When one is affected the other sympathizes. In other words the state of the mind has to do with the health of the body - and a diseased or much abused body also has a telling effect on the mind.

As far back as Hippocrates, the Father of Medicine, it was recognized that man's emotions could produce certain physical effects. But it was not until A.D. 1818 that Heinroth coined the word that is often used to describe this phenomenon, "psychosomatic" disease. The Greek word for mind is "psuche" and that for the body is "soma". So we are now dealing with "mind-body" disease.

Remember then to think positively. Solomon, perhaps the wisest man that ever lived, said, "A cheerful heart does good like medicine, but a broken spirit makes one sick." (Prov 17:22, T. L.B.) One survey indicated that those who live the longest are those who enjoy their work the most. Will Rogers had it pretty well figured out when he said, "Most people are about as happy as they make up their mind to be."

Just as negative thoughts may destroy us, so positive attitudes will help us to maintain otimum health. The following are two lists that may prove helpful in reminding you what to avoid and what to strive for:

THIS CAN PRODUCE ILLNESS: depression, guilt, distrust, selfishness, sadness, anxiety, discontent, grief, remorse, anger, fear, envy, frustration, jealousy.

THIS WILL PROMOTE GOOD HEALTH: a sense satisfaction, a consciousness of rightdoing, cheerfulness, courage, hope, faith, sympathy, love, usefulness, gratitude, trust, calmness, contentment, service for others.

Why not set your mind right now? Determine to rise above life's difficulties and to have a long, healthy, happy life.
